

Do I need a River Licence to launch a craft on the River Stour?

Different waterways are effectively managed by different bodies which can be a little confusing, especially when you only want to put your boat on the water and go for a leisurely paddle.

To help river users to understand what is required on the River Stour, we provide below some information about River Licences.

What is a river licence?

Officially it's a waterways licence. It permits the use of any craft, be it a kayak, canoe, stand up paddleboard (SUP), rowboat and/or inflatable, on most waterways in England and Wales. It's not like a driving licence, where you have to take a test to get one. Anyone can get a licence, and it's something you should buy if you intend to launch any craft on inland waterways in England and Wales.

Where can I get a river licence?

You have three options to register to use your craft on the River Stour

1. ENVIRONMENT AGENCY (EA)

You can register your craft (powered/unpowered, private/commercial). Visit the 'Boating & Waterways' section of their website.

2. RIVER STOUR TRUST (RST)

Able to issue EA craft registrations for unpowered, private craft only. (Useful optional extras include River Stour Navigation Guide and EA Navigation Key).

3. BRITISH CANOEING (BC)

'On the Water' membership permits the member on certain navigations in England and other benefits. Membership covers the member and not the craft.

What will a river licence cost me?

Currently, The licence costs £45 for the year

Do I need to carry a waterways licence?

You will need to carry proof of your licence with you when you go on the River, to avoid a fine. (Obtaining a licence through British Canoeing includes a digital and physical card which you can take with you when you paddle, just in case you get asked to produce it!)
